In August, 2004 I lost my beloved half German Shepherd Bucky. Since this was my second loss in a number of months, I was absolutely devastated and vowed to not get another dog. Of course within a month I literally cried for want of that dear canine companionship and I asked for one to come to me. Since I wanted to be the “pickee” and not the “picker” I requested that the dog come up and give me a kiss.

Three times I tried to go see different dogs that were being offered and three times I simply could not get there. Then my vet called and said there was a year old bitch, supposedly half shepherd and half lab, whose owners needed to find a home for because there had been too many problems with their 3 dogs. For the first time in four tries, I made it to a house to look at a dog and I again prayed that, if she was meant for me, that she would come up to me and kiss me. Need I say what happened?

This old lady (70 in December!) took little (about 45# instead of Bucky’s 100# so she seemed small to me!) Jesse home in mid-September and the change in her has been awesome. When she arrived, her hipbones stuck out like coat racks, her tummy growled constantly, her ears were caked with gunk and pus and so was her “bottom,” and her teeth needed cleaning. So DYNAMITE and I went to work. Within a couple of days of Showdown and DynaPro on her food, no more tummy growls. Within 2 weeks of 3 times a week dosing ears and bottom with Solace, no more gunk or pus. Within a couple of months no more bad teeth that needed cleaning; they are now bright, shining white. I do have to admit that she does receive special dried gut chew toys, too. And within 2-3 months, no more coat-rack hipbones. She is a lean machine with energy and playfulness to spare and brings this old lady so much happiness my heart just swells in appreciation for her being in my life.

Something very interesting has happened a number of times when I see her playing outside in her yard—she seems gigantic. It is almost as if she really were Bucky’s size; like an overlay onto her smaller body. My upline, Rowan Emrys, thinks that is her spirit telling me that she may be small in body but very large in spirit!

Jesse has very definitely joined my precious animal family of my 14.3 hand Arab mare Gazettea and my 16+ hand AQHA gelding River. We are quite a DYNAMITE family, I can tell you! Thanks DYNAMITE for making my Jesse so healthy and happy!
